

PMAY-G Scheme Faces Corruption Scandal in Assam's Margherita

In Margherita, Assam, corruption allegations have surfaced concerning the Pradhan Mantri Awas Yojana – Gramin (PMAY-G) scheme. A house funded under the scheme has remained incomplete for over two years, sparking concerns about corruption and mismanagement.

The PMAY-G scheme aims to provide affordable housing to rural households. However, the incomplete project in Margherita raises questions about the efficacy of the scheme in the region. The house, which should have been finished long ago, stands as a testament to alleged corruption and inefficiency.

Local residents have voiced their frustrations, noting that the house was supposed to be a symbol of progress and better living conditions. Instead, it has become a reminder of the failings within the implementation of the scheme. Allegations against local officials and contractors suggest that funds may have been misused or misallocated, leaving the project unfinished.

Investigations into the matter reveal that the house was started with much promise but faced multiple delays. Workers reportedly abandoned the site, and construction materials went missing. The lack of oversight and accountability has contributed to the project's stagnation.

Residents have raised concerns that the corruption has not only stalled their progress but also undermined their trust in the government. They have called for a thorough investigation into the allegations to ensure that those responsible for the mismanagement are held accountable.

In response to the allegations, local authorities have promised to look into the matter. They have assured the public that they will investigate the charges of corruption and take necessary action to complete the housing project. However, there is skepticism among residents about the effectiveness of these promises.

The situation in Margherita highlights broader issues within the PMAY-G scheme, revealing potential gaps in its execution. As authorities work to address the allegations, the residents await a resolution to their prolonged struggle for adequate housing. The outcome of the investigation will be crucial in restoring faith in the scheme and ensuring that such issues do not recur in the future.